Mr. John Theophilous Marshall and his wife Hattie lived on Pillow St. before anyone else. He and his brothers built most of the houses on Pillow from Humphreys St. almost to the top of the hill with their own hands. At one point back then, the area was known as Marshall Hollow. His descendants still own and occupy many houses there. Mr. Marshall was a small businessman, he and his sons dug wells. My brother described seeing his well digging machines (he at one time had about three) great wooden assemblies built onto old 30's model trucks.

My brother says he remembered Mr. Marshall starting one up. It had a big gasoline engine on it (maybe a Waukesha) Mr. Marshall would turn a large wheel on the side of the engine and it would chug to life. By operating some levers on the side of the device the machine would erect itself into a derrick from which a long heavy solid iron bar about 3 or 4 inches in diameter and about 3 1/2 feet long would be dropped repeatedly actually pounding the hole for the well into the ground. When he and his sons were digging a well they would go and live at the site until the well was done. For payment then he took money, swine, goats, cows, horses, and such. The animals then would live in his back yard until he sold them or ate them or whatever. He had a farm somewhere he would move them to so we never saw them actually butchered. The aforementioned carbide was used we suppose in his well digging business. When carbide is dampened it produces acetylene, the gas used in welding and Mr. Marshall had an old acetylene welding rig in his shop. He would from time to time drive his old truck to Colonial Bakery on Franklin Road and they would sell him a truck load of day-old bread and cakes to feed to his hogs on his farm. When he would pull that truck into his drive loaded with baked goodies every kid in the neighborhood would converge to pull out as many Honey Buns and Cinnamon Rolls as we could before he left to feed his hogs. Mr. Marshall and his family were people well known and respected in the community and I am honored now to speak of them.
